DETAILED ACTION

EXAMINER'S AMENDMENT

The application has been amended as follows:

BEGIN EXAMINER'S AMENDMENT

In the specification:

Replace the title with: "A liquid crystal switchable coupler for coupling at least two unpolarized light inputs".

In the claims:

Claim 1: Replace all instances of the words "unpolarised", "polarised", and "polarisation" with the words "unpolarized", "polarized", and "polarization", respectively.

Claim 2: Replace the word "polarisation" with the word "polarization".

Claim 3: Replace all instances of the word "unpolarised" with the word "unpolarized".

Claim 6: Replace all instances of the words "unpolarised" and "polarised" with the words "unpolarized" and "polarized", respectively.

END EXAMINER'S AMENDMENT

Allowable Subject Matter

- Claims 1-6 are allowed.
- 2. The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance:
- Claim 1 recites a switchable coupler comprising first and second optical waveguides, a polarization splitter device between said waveguides, the waveguides being arranged, in the absence of activated first and second electro-optical switches to transmit refracted and reflected components of the first and second light inputs to the first and second outlet ports, respectively, first and second electro-optical switches for recombining said refracted and reflected components of the first and second light inputs and, when activated, to switch the components towards second and first outlet ports, respectively. None of the prior art alone or in combination discloses the subject matter of claim 1. Claims 2-5 are dependent on claim 1 and are also therefore allowed.

- 4. Handschy et al. (US 4,813,771) discloses an electro-optic switching device having first and second waveguides, first and second inputs, first and second outputs, a polarization splitter device between the waveguides, wherein in the absence of activated first and second electro-optical switches to transmit refracted and reflected components of the first and second light inputs to the first and second outlet ports, respectively. However, Handschy fails to disclose any additional electro-optic switches to switch the components towards first and second outlet ports, nor would it have been obvious to do so.
- 5. Leslie et al. (US 2003/0142262) discloses a liquid crystal cross-connect having first and second waveguides, a polarization splitter device, first and second electro-optic switches, wherein the first and second electro-optical switches for recombining said refracted and reflected components of the first and second light inputs and, when activated, to switch the components towards second and first outlet ports, respectively. However, Leslie fails to disclose wherein the polarization splitter device is located between the waveguides, or wherein in the absence of activated first and second electro-optical switches to transmit refracted and reflected components of the first and second light inputs to the first and second outlet ports, respectively, nor would it have been obvious to do so.

- 6. Buhrer et al. (US 4,784,470) discloses an optical switching device having first and second optical waveguides, a polarization splitter device between said waveguides, the waveguides being arranged, in the absence of activated first and second electro-optical switches to transmit refracted and reflected components of the first and second light inputs to the first and second outlet ports, respectively. However, Buhrer fails to disclose first and second electro-optical switches for recombining said refracted and reflected components of the first and second light inputs and, when activated, to switch the components towards second and first outlet ports, nor would it have been obvious to do so.
- 7. Claim 6 recites a method of coupling first and second inputs of unpolarized light comprising splitting each of said first and second inputs into respective refracted and reflected polarized components, transmitting said refracted and reflected components of said first and second inputs to first and second electro-optical switches, respectively, for recombining said refracted and reflected components of said first and second inputs and to switch the recombined first (second) output from a first (second) outlet to a second (first) outlet, respectively, and selecting the operation of said first and second electro-optical switches to couple said first and second inputs into an outlet from the group comprising said first outlet and said second outlet.
- Handschy et al. (US 4,813,771) discloses an electro-optic switching device having first and second waveguides, first and second inputs, first and second outputs, a polarization splitter device between the waveguides, wherein in the absence of activated first and second electro-optical switches to transmit refracted and reflected components of the first and second light inputs to the first and second outlet ports, respectively. However, Handschy fails to disclose the use of any additional electro-optic switches to switch the components towards first and second outlet ports, nor would it have been obvious to do so.

- 9. Leslie et al. (US 2003/0142262) discloses a liquid crystal cross-connect having first and second waveguides, a polarization splitter device, first and second electro-optic switches, wherein the first and second electro-optical switches for recombining said refracted and reflected components of the first and second light inputs and, when activated, to switch the components towards second and first outlet ports, respectively. However, Leslie fails to disclose wherein the polarization splitter device is located between the waveguides, or wherein in the absence of activated first and second electro-optical switches to transmit refracted and reflected components of the first and second light inputs to the first and second outlet ports, respectively, nor would it have been obvious to do so.
- 10. Buhrer et al. (US 5,132,822) discloses an optical switching device having first and second optical waveguides, a polarization splitter device between said waveguides, the waveguides being arranged, in the absence of activated first and second electro-optical switches to transmit refracted and reflected components of the first and second light inputs to the first and second outlet ports, respectively. However, Buhrer fails to disclose first and second electro-optical switches for recombining said refracted and reflected components of the first and second light inputs and, when activated, to switch the components towards second and first outlet ports, nor would it have been obvious to do so.

Any comments considered necessary by applicant must be submitted no later than the payment of the issue fee and, to avoid processing delays, should preferably accompany the issue fee. Such submissions should be clearly labeled "Comments on Statement of Reasons for Allowance."
